Framework and Principles

Kia ora, Faka'alofa lahi atu, Mālō nī, Talofa lava, Kia orana, Mālō e lelei, Fakatalofa atu, Ni sa bula vinaka, Mauri, Gude, Aloha, la ora na, warm Pacific Greetings and welcome, to the Healthier Lives Implementation Network. The He Pikinga Waiora (Enhancing Wellbeing) Implementation Framework (HPW) provides the general framework for this project by looking at the key principles for implementing health promotion programmes within Indigenous communities. 6 HPW centres Indigenous perspectives and knowledge (such as Kaupapa Māori and Kaupapa Pasifika) and integrates four key elements: culture-centred approach, community engagement, systems thinking, and integrated knowledge translation.

Each of these elements emphasise certain principles (italicised and in bold below) and are consistent with Te Tiriti o Waitangi and Pacific practices:

Indigenous mātauranga: localised knowledge and ways of knowing and doing (e.g., mana motuhake).

Community engagement focuses on principles of partnership and co-design and mutual respect.

Culture-centredness identifies the need to have localised knowledge and context reflected in implementation as well as self-determination in what works best for the community.

System thinking: touchpoints with the system to support implementation and health equity.

Integrated knowledge translation: bidirectional learning and dialogue as well as sustainability.

These form our key principles: Localised knowledge and context, partnership and co-design, mutual respect, options and self-determination, health equity, bi-directional learning and dialogue, and sustainability.
